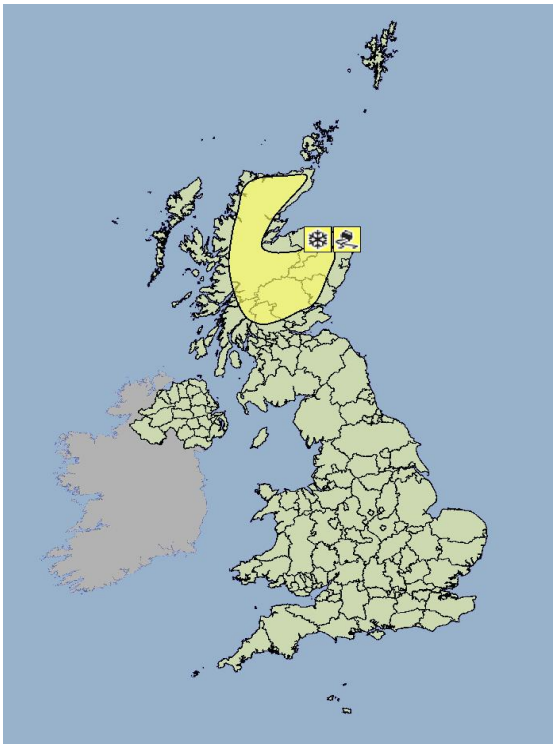
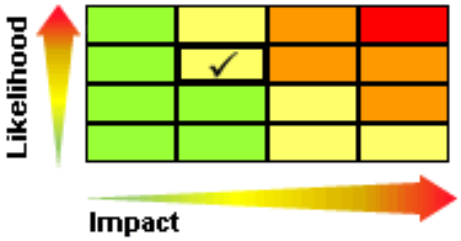
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
A band of snow is expected to push north across Scotland during the early part of Tuesday, becoming slow-moving, before weakening through the day. 1-3 cm of snow is likely in places, with up to 5 cm possible over higher routes, such as the A9. Ice will be an additional hazard.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Snow and Ice

Valid from 00:05 on Tue, 06th Mar 2018 until 15:00 on Tue, 06th Mar 2018

A spell of snow is expected to develop over parts of central and northern Scotland early Tuesday, before dying out from the south through the day. Icy stretches are also likely on untreated surfaces. Delays to travel and public transport could occur, with some temporary disruption to power supplies and mobile phone coverage.
